Children on the spectrum
A short guide for parents and carers of autistic children
Getting the right support for your autistic child

There are around 150,000 autistic children in the UK, many undiagnosed. A diagnosis can help parents understand their autistic child better and why they are experiencing difficulties. It can also make it easier to access the services, benefits and support they need at home and school.

Children on the autism spectrum:

- find it hard to understand non-verbal communication, like facial expressions and tone of voice
- have difficulty understanding people’s behaviour and recognising others’ feelings or expressing their own
- take language very literally and find metaphors and idioms confusing
- engage in repetitive behaviour and routines and can develop intense and highly focused interests
- find change and unexpected situations stressful and very scary
- are very sensitive to light, touch, sound or smell.

Getting a diagnosis for your child

If you feel your child may be autistic, ask your GP for a diagnosis referral. Not all GPs have in-depth knowledge of autism, so give clear examples of any difficulties your child has had with the above characteristics. Once your GP is convinced of your child’s difficulties, your child should be referred for a formal assessment (diagnosis). This should be with a team of professionals which might include a paediatrician, speech and language therapist and specialist psychologist.

www.autism.org.uk/childdiagnosis

Your child’s rights to support in school

If you think your child needs support at school, your local authority has a duty to carry out a needs assessment. This could help with support at school or pre-school, from teachers, support staff and other services such as speech and language therapy.

www.autism.org.uk/education
"When your child is first diagnosed, it can feel like you’ve entered a whole new world and you can worry about your child’s future. So, it’s really important to get as much support as you can as early as you can.”

Dr Carrie Grant and David Grant, parents to autistic children
Parent to Parent helpline

The emotional effect of a diagnosis can be overwhelming and it can feel like a lot to deal with, even if it’s something you were expecting. Other family members may also struggle. Our Parent to Parent helpline is a good place to start to talk to other people who have been through a similar experience.

www.autism.org.uk/P2P  Tel: 0808 800 4106

EarlyBird programme

We offer a three-month training programme for parents and carers of pre-school autistic children, involving group training sessions, individual home visits and ongoing work with their child at home. There is also an EarlyBird Plus programme for children who receive a later diagnosis (four-eight years) as well as our EarlyBird Healthy Minds and Teen Life programmes.

www.autism.org.uk/earlybird

Educational support and rights

Your child may be entitled to get extra help in school. You and the school can ask for a formal assessment. In England, your authority may issue an education, health and care plan. In Wales and Northern Ireland, it will be a statement and in Scotland, a co-ordinated support plan. The assessment will establish what needs your child has, what kinds of extra support they should have and what type of school they should go to. We have a free Education Rights Service available to help.

www.autism.org.uk/education

Applying for benefits

Autism is recognised as a disability in the UK. This means that many autistic children and their families will qualify for a number of current benefits like Disability Living Allowance. Visit our website www.autism.org.uk/benefits for the latest information.

Local branches and meeting other families

We have 116 volunteer-led branches up and down the country. That means 75% of the UK population lives within 20 miles of a group of understanding and experienced individuals who can provide support and advice for autistic children and their families. Many branches offer special activities for autistic children. Visit our website to find your local branch and get in touch.

www.autism.org.uk/branches
Meet Levi
Levi is a non-verbal 12-year-old who often finds social situations very distressing and is prone to meltdowns. Levi’s parents, Paul and Michael, contacted our Parent to Parent service for advice and to find out about local services to help.

Meet James
James was two when he was diagnosed. His early diagnosis meant his family could attend our EarlyBird programme. This early intervention and the right support has helped James, who was non-verbal and displaying distressed behaviour, flourish at school.

Meet Harry
Harry, who is 13, experienced a few bad years at school due to a lack of support and understanding from his teachers and school. So mum, Jody, contacted our Education Rights Service for advice. www.autism.org.uk/educationrights

Meet Soffi
Soffi is a 15-year-old autistic girl and active member of her local National Autistic Society branch. Meeting other young autistic people and hearing about their experiences has really boosted Soffi’s confidence.

For more information on all of our services:
visit our website at www.autism.org.uk
Street in touch with like-minded parents

Many parents have told us having autistic children can sometimes feel like you are on your own. Our online community is a great way to contact some of the 150,000 families with autistic children in the UK. You can hear their stories, share yours and keep up-to-date on all the latest news, developments and legislation.

http://community.autism.org.uk
www.twitter.com/Autism
www.facebook.com/NationalAutisticSociety

Join Chris Packham and our 22,000 members

The National Autistic Society was set up in 1962 by a group of parents, including Lorna Wing who coined the term ‘the autistic spectrum’. Since then, our membership has grown to 22,000 and, as well as belonging to the UK’s leading charity for autistic people, members receive:

• our quarterly Your Autism magazine
• exclusive member offers and discounts to the Autism Shows in London, Birmingham and Manchester
• an invitation to our Annual General Meeting where you can help shape the future direction of the charity.

Become a member today at www.autism.org.uk/membership

My child is autistic card

Many people don’t understand autism and how things they take for granted might cause difficulties for people on the spectrum.

This card is a great way for you to let them know your child is autistic and might need some extra time or help in certain situations.

www.autism.org.uk/shop
“The best way to create a society that works for autistic people, is to join one.”

Chris Packham, animal enthusiast, autistic man and National Autistic Society ambassador and honorary member National Autistic Society
Transforming lives and changing attitudes since 1962

• Our website, 116 local volunteer-led branches, online community and specialist helplines provide information, support and practical advice to hundreds of autistic people and their families every day.

• We train over 11,000 teachers, health workers and other professionals every year to help ensure schools, health services and workplaces meet the needs of autistic people.

• Our Too Much Information campaign has reached 65 million people, helping to increase understanding of the difficulties autistic people face every day.

• In 2009, we led a campaign to persuade the Government to introduce the first ever Autism Act in England that guarantees the rights of autistic adults.

• More than 300 organisations, including schools and care services, have achieved Autism Accreditation, our quality standard to recognise best autism practice.

With your help, we can do even more. Find out how you can become a member and other ways to support our charity at www.autism.org.uk